Advanced Artist Award supports artistic development and exploration

WHITEHORSE – Twelve artists will share $40,000 to explore new directions and produce new work in the visual, literary and performing arts Tourism and Culture Minister Elaine Taylor announced.

"Yukon government is proud to support professional artists in developing their craft and creating innovative work," Taylor said. "We all benefit from their creativity, which enriches our quality of life and our communities, and which is integral to making Yukon a wonderful, vibrant place to live and to visit."

The Advanced Artist Award is available to professional artists to develop a particular art form or explore a new area; for short term educational pursuits; for post secondary or post graduate study; or for travel related to artistic development.

For writer Jamella Hagen, the award will support the completion of a collection of poetry that explores themes of geography, identity, gender politics, and the politics of travel.

"Receiving an Advanced Artist Award will provide me with time to complete my first manuscript of poetry, forthcoming with Nightwood Editions," Hagen said. "The manuscript begins in Northern BC where I grew up, and I moved to the Yukon from Vancouver last year hoping to find some closure for the project – to reconnect with the north – but also to explore new approaches and opportunities. I am grateful for the community and support that I have found here."

The award's support for artistic development through education will assist Brian Fidler in attending a professional master class for theatre directors in Kitchener/Waterloo.

"This award means that I will be learning from the very best teachers in the country in a hands-on setting," Fidler said. "As well, I'll have the opportunity to connect with my fellow students, directors from across Canada, who are creating exciting, innovative work. The experience will enable me to raise the bar of my own work as a director and to share what I learn with Yukon actors, playwrights and audience."

Award applications are accepted twice a year, with submissions adjudicated by a jury of artists representing the disciplines of the applicants. Jury members for the spring intake included Rosemary Piper, Mark Preston, Daniel Janke, Amanda Leslie and Jerome Stueart.
