Yukon museums benefit from Special Projects Assistance Program

WHITEHORSE – Thirteen museums and First Nation cultural/heritage centres, along with the Yukon Historical and Museums Association, will share $300,000 for collections, exhibits and other projects.

"Yukon is fortunate to have a wide range of heritage institutions where residents and visitors can learn about our culture and history," Tourism and Culture Minister Elaine Taylor said. "Each and every one of the projects supported through the program will help ensure that the history of Yukon communities is accessible to its citizens and to visitors for years to come."

The Teslin Tlingit Heritage Centre received $19,200 to inventory and catalogue the Teslin Tlingit Council's permanent collection of carvings, hidework, beadwork and other artifacts. The collection includes contemporary pieces by artists like Mark Porter, Margaret Douville and Alex Dickson. It also contains donations of historical items such as a vest and mukluks made by the late Mabel Johnson. Mrs. Johnson's pieces won awards at the 1972 Sourdough Rendezvous beadwork competition and were subsequently purchased by an RCMP officer who has now donated them to the Teslin Tlingit Council.

"This collection is invaluable to our people," Teslin Tlingit Council Chief Peter Johnston said. "The assistance provided for this project will ensure that the artifacts are well-documented and their authenticity and integrity preserved. We want to share inland Tlingit culture by publicly displaying these works for all Yukoners and visitors to enjoy. There is much to celebrate for the Teslin Tlingit and this growing collection is one of the finest expressions of our culture."

Since it was first introduced in 2006, the Special Projects Assistance Program has provided over $1.5 million to Yukon museums, First Nation cultural/heritage centres and community interpretive centres. A variety of projects are eligible for funding including exhibit planning, small capital acquisition, conservation projects, cooperative marketing ventures and revenue generation enhancement.

In addition to this funding program, the Yukon government contributes over $1 million in annual operating funds to Yukon museums, interpretive and First Nation cultural/heritage centres.
